Aboriginal cultural diversity training

Free online training for all practice staff

To help improve health outcomes for Aboriginal people, WA Primary Health Alliance (WAPHA) is offering free online Aboriginal cultural diversity training for all general practice staff.

The free online training is the SBS Inclusion Program (First Nations) that includes short learning modules, which take approximately an hour to complete in total, with the following learning outcomes:

- Improving knowledge about the history of Aboriginal culture and experiences.
- Understanding how to identify myths versus facts.
- Comprehending some of the stereotypes and assumptions sometimes made about Aboriginal people.
- Recognising the importance of spirituality in Aboriginal culture.
- Recognising the importance of family and kinship in Aboriginal culture.
- Grasping the impact of colonisation on Aboriginal people.
- Comprehending the trauma felt by the Stolen Generations and the intergenerational trauma still being felt today.
- Implementing tools to actively participate in the reconciliation process as both an individual and a business.
- Explaining what the Uluru Statement from the Heart is and how it came about.
- Describing the events that led to the referendum in 2023, which proposed Aboriginal people be recognised in an enshrined Voice to Parliament.

After completing the training, you will receive a certificate for your professional development record, as well as a suite of resources you can use to apply your learnings in the primary health environment.
