Are medicines definitely making us healthier? Polypharmacy and medication burden are a well-known sources of mortality and morbidity in adults, and older adults in particular, and addressing this is a key clinical challenge. Addressing this challenge offers one of the biggest and most exciting opportunities to improve clinical care for older adults in the next 30 years. This presentation will discuss what research has taught us about medication withdrawal and reducing medication burden, as well as discussing practical approaches and tips around dealing with polypharmacy and the art of medication withdrawal.
